Breast care and screening

About this easy read booklet

This booklet is about breast care and screening.

You can learn about checking your breasts, and about screenings for breast cancer.

If you are worried about your health, you should talk to a doctor or nurse.

Breast care

The most common cancer for women is breast cancer.

Women of any age can get breast cancer but the risk is higher when you are over 50.

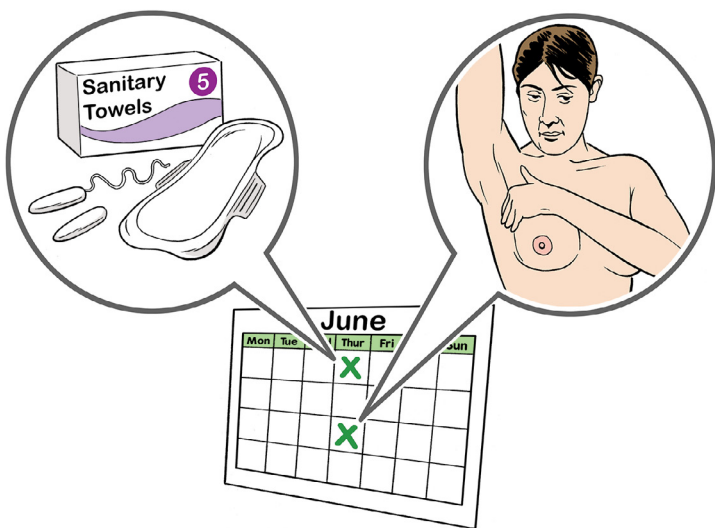

If your mother, aunt or sister has had breast cancer, you may be more likely to get it.

Cancer is easier to treat if it is found early. You should check your breasts regularly for any changes.

It is very important to check what your breasts look and feel like at different times of the month.

This is because the menstrual cycle causes changes in the breasts. It can make them bigger or more sensitive.

The menstrual cycle is the time from the first day of your period to the day before your next one.

Every person's body is different. You should know what your breasts look and feel like normally. Then you will be able to notice any changes or lumps.

You may have always had one breast that is larger than the other. This is OK.

Use a mirror to check for changes in your breasts that you can see.

Check for changes in your breasts that you can feel. It may be easier to do this somewhere private, like in the shower or bath.

Changes to look for

Changes in the shape of your breasts or nipples.

Lumps in your breasts or underarms.

Changes to the way the skin on your breast looks or feels.

Any liquid coming out of your nipples.

Your nipple turning in.

How to check your breasts

Feel all over each breast.

Then feel around the nipple areas.

Then feel under your arms.

If you find any changes or lumps in your breasts or your underarms, it is very important to see your doctor as soon as you can.

You can ask to see a female doctor if you would like.

Breast screening

If you are aged 50 to 71 you will get a letter inviting you for breast screening. This will happen every 3 years. You will get your first invite before you are 53.

Screenings are tests that look for very early signs of cancer. You have a screening even if you have no symptoms of breast cancer.

Finding you have breast cancer early means it can be treated or stopped before it causes problems.

Breast screening means having two x-rays of each breast. These are called mammograms.

An x-ray is a picture of the inside of your body.

The mammograms will show if your breasts are healthy or if there are any signs of cancer.

You might have a mammogram at a:

- hospital

- clinic

- mobile unit

This is what a breast screening machine looks like. This takes the x-rays of your breasts.

The screening will always be done by a woman.

What happens at a breast screening appointment

When you arrive for your breast screening, you will meet the radiographer. They will tell you what a mammogram is. You can ask them questions.

A radiographer is a person who takes scans and x-rays of your body.

The radiographer will check your name, address and date of birth.

You will be asked to take off your top and bra.

The radiographer will put your breast between two flat plates on the machine. The plates will press against your breast to take the x-rays. The radiographer will x-ray one breast at a time.

It only takes a few minutes.

The radiographer will go behind a glass screen when the x-rays are being taken.

Some women find the screening painful or uncomfortable. These feelings should not last long.

You can ask the radiographer how and when you will get your results.

Sometimes you may be asked to come back for another mammogram. This may happen if the results are not clear. This does not always mean something is wrong.

The results may say you do not need to come back. You will be invited for another breast screening in 3 years.

If you see changes in your breasts before 3 years, you should talk to your doctor.
